V. General information

- i. In principle, the basis for calculating the relevant percentages is the amount of the transaction volume.
- ii. The percentage of transaction costs depends on the transaction volume. It decreases with increasing transaction volume. Please refer to the current price list for details. All examples listed here use the respective maximum rate.
- iii. If a transaction is to be processed via an exchange, the respective exchange fees may vary depending on the instrument and exchange.
- iv. Please refer to the PRIIP KIDs and other documents provided for this purpose for more detailed information on the respective product costs of a financial instrument.
- v. Both currency amounts and percentages are rounded to 2 decimal places.
- vi. In the examples, the cost of buying and selling the instrument is shown; for the sake of simplicity, it is assumed that the transaction volume is the same for both transactions.
- vii. Running costs are incurred annually. In the examples, the assumption is made that the holding period of the financial instrument is one year.
- viii. Third-party fees are not refunded to the client in the DIRECT investment package.
- ix. With regard to the total costs shown in the example costs, these show the effect of the costs on the return on the investment. The total costs do not contain a statement about the return itself. The costs reduce the return during the holding period. When purchasing a financial instrument, the possible entry costs, i.e. the costs of acquiring the financial instrument, must be taken into account. The running costs are incurred continuously in the same amount. The exit costs, i.e. the costs arising from the sale of the financial instrument, are particularly noticeable for the sale.
- x. In the case of bonds, accrued interest is not shown in the cost estimate.
